

Scintillating grid illusion

A neural process called lateral inhibition. The intensity at a point in the visual system is not simply the result of a single receptor, but the result of a group of receptors.

Moving right along

The sphere is going downward as if it were on a conveyor belt or a slow treadmill....?

