

Simultaneous contrast

When two colors are side-by-side, they interact and affect our perception

Bezold effect

Bezold was a rug maker who learned he could swap out one strong color (white for black, say) to change how the rest of the colors are perceived.

e.g., the red seems lighter combined with the white, and darker combined with the black.

